

Srdjan Verbic is a learning enthusiast who tries to share his passion for critical thinking. He is a university professor teaching data science and statistics in Belgrade, co-founder of think-tank Observatory of Social Innovations, national and international consultant in science education and data analysis, former minister of education, science and technological development in Serbia and program leader of hundreds of extracurricular science education events.

Professor Verbic graduated Physics and received PhD degree in Artificial Intelligence at University of Belgrade. He authored several textbooks and online courses on physics and data science. His expertise covers data science and AI research, educational assessment methodology, STEM curriculum development, open data initiatives, and education policy analysis. He also participates in startup and innovation ecosystems as a consultant, mentor and evaluator.